Bog oak is an oak wood that has been laying in wetlands, submerged under water and peat for several thousands years and changed the color of the wood to dark grey or black. Usually it is extracted from rivers and wetlands, in areas where oaks have grown for several millennia.

GRIGO Bog Oak is treated using the same processes and natural materials that can be found in nature. The patented GRIGO technology lets us in much shorter period of time (from one to six months) to replicate that natural process which affects logs of bog oak, lying under the water for thousands of years.

GRIGO Bog Oak products (veneer, lamella, planks and boards) are of even better quality as very rare and highly expensive bog oak timber, which could be found in nature in very limited quantities.

GRIGO Bog Oak should not be confused with heat treated oak, steamed or fumed oak, which gets its dark coloring artificially by the use of slightly toxic ammonia. Furthermore, such ammonia treated wood has much less density and hardness and the color palette is limited to just different shades of brown.

GRIGO Bog Oak has the black* color not only on the surface, but also throughout all the volume of the wood. The patented technology also grants GRIGO Bog Oak such properties as heightened density, better durability, and exclusive texture.

Controlled manufacturing process lets us achieve desirable color palette of the wood. All of the shades correspond the coloring of the naturally found bog oak: inky black, black, ashy gray, straw brown.*

GRIGO Bog Oak qualifies as a luxury product because of its features. It is an excellent choice for using in flooring, furniture, High-End acoustic system casings (speakers, amplifiers, etc.), luxury car interiors and for other general purposes.
